

Hello RemoteLeads team,

Reading through Derick's story of frustration with the process of trying to find good remote projects sounded like something I might write about my own job search. Like Derick I have spent countless hours reading through job descriptions feeling very excited until I get to the last line and it turns out the company needs someone in a different region. Time is a precious resource for developers and the time lost due to the inefficiency of this process is stressful and frustrating. I deeply admire Derick's decision to create a tool that both saves time and removes the stress from this process and then made that tool publicly available. Because of my belief in RemoteLeads' goal of making finding projects easier, I would love to join the RemoteLeads team in working towards that goal.

Given the opportunity, I believe that I possess the tools and mindset needed to become a contributing member of the RemoteLeads' development team. I pride myself in engineering excellence and this shows in the full-stack language learning application I recently built. Using a variety of different technologies, I was able to automate the process of collecting posts from around the internet, analyzing their linguistic content and providing the user with content suited for the reading level as well as a language learning exercise made from the post content. If you are interested in my ability to make responsive, mobile friendly web applications I welcome you to open my project on your mobile device. Finally, my background in language, education and development has taught me the skill of encountering new challenges and crafting a plan to overcome them. I have a fascination with tough problems and am always interested following whatever path is needed to solve them. My goal is to use these skills to be a contributing member of the RemoteLeads development team.

I understand that at RemoteLeads the focus is making great, easy to use tools that help developers find projects suited to their skills and needs. I would love to be a part of this process. My goal is to be a constructive member of a development team that requires me to constantly challenge and grow my skills as a developer and that's what draws me to RemoteLeads. I hope to hear from you soon! In the meantime, please let me know if there is anything I can do for the RemoteLeads team.

Thank you for your time,
Paul Storm

My LinkedIn: <https://www.linkedin.com/in/paul-storm-6b191687/>
My GitHub: <https://github.com/paulwstorm>